

THE VISITORS' TWO SCORES.

They Look Small Beside the Home Club's Twenty.

COLD DAY FOR THE MINNIES.

Denver Pounds Des Moines Out of Eight—Other Games Played Yesterday in League and Association.

Another Victory.

By the practice of a little con game the Omaha again prevailed upon a lot of farmers from Minneapolis to go out to the ball grounds, yesterday afternoon, and play them a game of ball.

It would have been better for the Minnies had they remained away.

For the white legs not only won the game but they also gave the visitors an unmerciful thrashing.

Verily, Minneapolis' lot is far from happy. There were only about four thousand people present when this happened, and oh me! weren't they glad!

It was bad enough for Morton's aggregation to lose the game, but to be jumped upon and trampled in through the sod was much worse.

So it can not be wondered at that Captain Hengle was as sore as a ball last night.

Morrison, erratic Morrison, started in to do the rotating for the Minneapolis, but he is no cog and knows when he's caught. One inning was about his size yesterday. Then Turner went into the box, and the Minnie's luck changed and got worse. Long, lank, cadaverous Mr. Jansen did the catching.

Willis and Nagle were in the points for Omaha and their labors were super.

The first inning opened up in an enthusiastic manner, and the multitude was fairly tickled to death.

The French con from Amsterdam, known as Herr Strauss, by a little con game, was presented with his base by Mr. Morrison. Then the ex-president smashed the ball out to the left garden for a single, the count reaching three. Jack Crooks was in an emulatory mood and so he just smacked her for a bag himself, sending Strauss across the plate and Buffalo to third. Crooks stole second, skating in to the bag on his shirt front. Morrison was mad, and he fired away at Cooney at random, catching him in the calf of the leg. Of course he went to first, and the bags were all occupied. Sir Joseph Walsh now stepped up to the rubber, and as the slanting sunshine glinted among his straw tresses, no looked like the statue of Stern Reserve.

Morrison secured the ball in his sinuous fingers, bent his body and let her go. It came like a rifle ball and would probably have gone clear through the grand stand had it not been for one thing—

That was the fact that the statue of Stern Reserve.

The sphere collided with it with a sound not unlike that made by blowing up a peanut sack and sitting down on it with great suddenness. The next moment the ball was in the air, and both Cleveland and Crooks ran home, while little Cooney scampered clear round the base. Walsh immediately dashed away to second, and in his eagerness to join the young man in the full flush of his ambition, Minneapolis' elongated backstop threw the ball way over Hamilton's head, and the tropical-haired boy vaulted on to third while Cooney crossed the plate.

The yell of the excited audience were long, loud and reverberating.

It was such a pretty sight to see the Omahas galloping around the bases.

The next moment the ball was in the air, and the total score on a wild pitch by Morrison, which was also a missed third strike, Nagle being at the bat.

It was tough on Morton's crowd, but the audience howled with fustian delight all the same.

Canavan, Messitt and Willis went out and the fun filled for a few moments.

Mickey Morrison had an elegant sufficiency, and he changed places with Turner in middle field. The people sympathized with him, but they were too happy to observe a respectful silence.

Willis signalled his appearance by striking out the two first Minnies at the bat in fifty. No one knows what a fifty is, but that is what a sweet-faced girl said, who sat right behind the score's box, all through the game.

Turner and Daly went back to the bench in disgust, while the people cried, "oh! oh!"

That was pretty work.

"Clear Sign" West took first on four bad balls.

That wasn't quite so pretty.

Roddy Hanahan, however, flow out to Crooks, and so no harm was done.

In the second the Minnies scored first on a wild throw by Turner, who had thrown Mike's place in the box. He went to second on Cleveland's second safe hit, stole third, and then actually stole home.

The way the audience greeted this exploit made the Minnie's sick.

Old Buffalo ambled clear round to third on Crooks' out from Turner, who had scored on Cooney's drive to right. The latter got to second on a passed ball, third on Walsh's hit, but was caught at the plate as he endeavored to score on a second.

Hengle made a great throw, and was deservedly applauded. Nagle struck out.

But seven runs in the first two innings was plenty.

In their half the visitors got the first of their two runs. Cooney made an inexcusable out of Farmer Miller's long fly, and Hengle sent him home on a lucky two-stroke.

Turner was seized with a generous streak in the third, and he made both Canavan and Messitt a present of first on eight wretchedly bad balls.

They stole second in concert, and a moment later Willis drove them both home by a rather drive to left.

Right here the trenchant air was again set a-gallop with chin music.

Strauss went out at first, but President Cleveland reached first on a muff of his fly, but Crooks and Willis were downed up, and the Omahas had to be content with a pair of tallies.

The Minnies were Chicagoed, Turner and West striking out, and Hanahan dying at first. Daly, however, had reached first on balls.

But why continue this monotonous story? Won't it suffice to know that the White Legs, on two hits, two errors and a base on balls, scored three times over in the fourth; once in the fifth on a hit and a couple of safes, and five times in the sixth, on Messitt's three-bagger, Willis, single, Cleveland's base, by being hit, Crooks' three-bagger and Cooney's base on balls; once in the seventh on a couple of singles and a couple of steals, and once in the ninth on Canavan's magnificent crack over the left field fence for a home run.

The Minnies were blacked with dreary monotony up to the eighth, when on an error, a lovely two-sacker and a single they managed to squeeze in one more at the little run.

The third game will be played this afternoon.

The Game This Afternoon.

Minneapolis and Omaha will play their third game at the ball park this afternoon. The visitors will have young Vinton in the box and promise a much better game than the last two. Vinton was formerly with the Philadelphia, and the home team will be fooled in him.

"Jumped" Too Much.

Malcolm Anderson, a Swede living at the corner of Twelfth and Jones, was arrested last night for assaulting a namesake. In explanation he said: "He jumped me and jumped him out of the door." The affair might have ended there had not Malcolm attempted to "jump" his namesake's furniture out of the house.

MARCH OF IMPROVEMENT.

It is Lined With Demolished Structures of Early Omaha.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Where the Bee Was Born, and Where the Youths of Many Years Ago Assembled to Develop Muscle.

An Early Sanctuary.

The erection of the proposed Commercial National bank on the corner of Sixteenth and Farnam streets has resulted in the demolition of the old Redick rookery and the first Congregational church erected in this city.

The last brick of the latter has hardly been removed from its place, but the little structure, with all its associations, will now live but in the memories of those who love the past.

Yesterday, there stood upon the curb an aged lady, clad in mourning robes. Despite the clouds of dust from the disintegrated mortar and the danger from passing teams, she watched the work of demolition with an interest which was displayed in every feature.

Once, when a section of the wall fell with a dull sound upon the debris, the lady's eyes flashed as if she considered the destruction an act of vandalism.

She was alone in the crowd. It was that little church in which, as a girl, she had first worshipped in Omaha. It was in that little sanctuary that she had first seen the gentleman to whom she was afterwards married.

It was within the walls of this building that a religious alliance was consummated, through the agency of a minister who has since been called beyond the tomb. There were her children baptized, and there, too, bereaved and heart-broken, she disappeared from the scene.

Tears arose in the old lady's eyes, and with tottering steps she left the affecting scene. But she had viewed for the last time the little house of prayer which was so intimately connected with everything she loved in the past.

The church was organized by the Rev. Rouben Gaylord, whose widow and son survive him in this city. He was a native of Norfolk, Conn., and a graduate of Yale college. He arrived here in September, 1855, and the following Christmas day was joined by his wife and daughter. He commenced to preach in the council chamber of the old territorial house on the last of December.

His services were held in the afternoon and by salary were $500 per year. On the 4th of May of the following year Mr. Gaylord organized the First Congregational society, the membership consisting of but nine people, comprising, as the reverend gentleman mentions in some of his sermons, nine people, namely, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Chapman, James W. Seymour, a Mrs. Allen and the clergyman himself with his wife and daughter. The year 1856 arrived before steps were taken to erect a church.

When T. O. Goodspeed, E. Estabrook, still in Omaha, and Lorin Miller, deceased, were appointed as a committee on construction. In those days the population of the city did not exceed 500. The site of the church had been donated by the ferry company. In his notes, Mr. Gaylord says that the work of making contracts and getting material devolved upon him and that it was no easy task. The saw-mill on the bank of the river, owned by Mr. Salisbury, was continually besieged, and to get the timber as fast as it was needed, it was necessary to have a team ready to haul it away as fast as it came.

The work was done during the winter, and the church was completed when his family physician, Dr. Miller volunteered to aid him.

While the church was in course of erection, services were at intervals held in the dining room of the Douglas house on Harney street, near Thirtieth. On the 28th of October, 1856, the structure had been so far completed that the congregation was enabled to hold services in the basement. A Sunday school was organized, under the direction of Mr. Gaylord, and the membership of the association was increased by six worshippers. The building was completed in 1857, the carpenter work being done by James E. Boyd and his brother John Boyd, the former of whom is now well known in this city, and was referred to.

The painting was done by Mr. Robb and the trimming by Mr. McAusland. Completed, the building was but a little country church, with a sugar-loaf spire resting upon a white square base, such as may even now be found in ten thousand cities and hamlets in the land. The dedicatory exercises did not take place until the 9th of August, 1857, when there were gathered a large audience to do honor to the occasion.

In 1858 and 1860 the church enjoyed successful revivals, the last continuing for several weeks.

Rev. Mr. Gaylord continued as pastor until 1861, when he retired to accept the agency in this state of the American Home Missionary association, leaving the church with ninety-six members. The cost of the church was $1,500, and was supplied by the proceeds of a fair, the net proceeds of which were $1,500.

It took place in the St. Charles hotel, then on Harney street between Thirtieth and Twelfth streets. After many years of successful labor, Rev. Mr. Gaylord died in Omaha, January 1880, leaving the impress of his character upon the minds of many people now in this city who still fondly cherish recollections of the saintly divine.

In this connection many of those early worshippers will be pleased to know that, about the end of June, the widow and son of Rev. Mr. Gaylord will publish a history of that gentleman's life, which will necessarily be largely a history of Omaha during the period between 1855 and 1880.

A brief paragraph in these columns, several days ago, told of the demolition of the house in which THE BEE was born. And although it was done in the midst of a rain storm, the clouds of dust which filled the air reminded one of the breezy days not long ago, when a zephyr could and did fill in the atmosphere with dust so thick as to make it almost impossible to see.

The house in question stood on the southeast corner of Dodge and Twelfth streets, and was long known as the Redfield house. Like many another ancient structure, it had a history which is aptly told in a little semi-circular sheet published last January by M. H. Redfield. It had no pretensions. It was a plain frame building, of two stories, with rough sides and windows on every side. Thousands of people in all the years it has stood, the attacks of the elements have passed little thinking of the part it has played in the enlightenment of the people of this section of the country. On this subject, the gentleman referred to, writes: "I went down there, clusters around the Redfield printing house, from which this paper emanates, enough of newspaper history to make a respectable volume. For twenty-two years the type have been furnishing messages to countless readers.
